HIGH SCHOOLS FOR HK?

SOLVE one problem and you create another: this has been an experience which has dogged Hongkong persistently in recent years. It is with us again. This time with the growing demand for more secondary schools which is the result of Government's success with its seven-year programme on primary education. We say "success" deliberately. The Education Department determined in 1954 that its aim must be to provide every child in Hongkong with a basic primary education and in this endeavour it is succeeding.

The Rev. George She's remarks to the annual conference of the Teachers Association on Saturday were primarily concerned with the short-term outlook which is of course the most pressing problem. But with a foreseeable annual demand for 35,000 new primary places, the long-term outlook for secondary school expansion is not cheerful. Nor is this a situation which Government will want to shrug off as being beyond the scope of its intentions. Growth of the secondary schools must keep pace in some sort of proportion to primary places.

THE Education Department's aim is still to maintain a ratio of one in four, that of course the largest of the growth of primary schools the more difficult it is going to be to maintain this figure. Whether Government will be able to increase the Education grant by $5 or $10 million for the next ten years as Mr She suggested is problematical, but assuming Mr Crozier succeeds, how can this money be spent on secondary education in a way which will most benefit primary school graduates?

Mr She has laid stress on the Anglo-Chinese and technical school and he has underlined the importance of the teaching of English and the demand for it. No "colonial" consideration dictates this, as Mr She said, the lingua franca of the East. And schools all over the Colony show that Chinese students regard competence in the English language as an essential basic need for anyone venturing into business in Hongkong today. But it would not be right to interpret this as a demand for a full secondary education.

Chinese Shrimps Banned From U.S. Roads

Washington, May 4. Shrimps imported from China by Canada may not travel on American roads, the State Department announced today. They have been banned on the grounds of "national security," officials said, because the Government refuses to do anything which might help the Peking regime in any way. Canada wished to transport the shrimps over about 1,000 miles of United States roads from Vancouver to Alberta—and asked for freedom of transit under Gatt, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. But the United States said there was a complete ban on Communist Chinese goods entering the country—and claimed the right to refuse transit under the security provisions of article 21 of Gatt. In Ottawa, the Canadian House of Commons rocked with laughter today when a Member of Parliament asked how the transport of the shrimps and soya sauce across American territory could affect United States security.

Premier John Diefenbaker, disputing the American right to forbid the goods in question, said the Canadian Government had expressed this view to the American State Department and was studying what steps could be taken by the Canadian authorities.

Meanwhile the Toronto daily newspaper, Globe and Mail said in an editorial devoted to the episode that this was the first time it had heard of soya sauce constituting a national menace. The newspaper added that the United States must be in a bad way if it considered its foundations could be undermined by the passage of a cargo destined for the making of chop suey. — Reuter and France-Press.

IRAQ WANTS BRITISH ARMS

Surprise London Disclosure Tells Of Kassem's Request For Jets

By K. C. THALER

London, May 4. The Iraq Government of General Kassem has requested arms and military planes from Britain, it was reliably learned today.

MONTY AVOIDS THE PM

London, May 4. Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery has sent a letter to Mr Harold Macmillan, the British Prime Minister, conveying greetings and goodwill from Mr Nikita Khrushchev, it was learned tonight.

Lord Montgomery met the Soviet leader during his visit to Moscow last week. It is understood that the letter goes no further than simply conveying greetings and that there is no political significance about it. Lord Montgomery does not suggest in his letter that he should meet Mr Macmillan at present to talk over anything the Soviet leader said.

520 FIRMS TO BE NATIONALISED

London, May 5. The British Institute of Directors, in a booklet issued today, names 520 companies which it alleges will come under public control if Labour Party plans are put into effect.

These companies, each with a capital of more than £250,000, span every British industry and include all the major producers of motor cars, shipping lines and every newspaper group in Britain.

[Iraq recently announced its withdrawal from the Western-sponsored Baghdad Pact.] The secret request, made through diplomatic channels last month, was understood to be under careful consideration in London.

The Iraqi move, coinciding with a variety of Soviet aid offers, prompted diplomatic speculation that the regime was not so far irrevocably bent on a Communist course.

The Iraq request was understood to have been among the primary topics of discussion of the British envoy in Baghdad, Sir Humphrey Trevelyan, with Government officials here.

He flew to London for a series of consultations about a fortnight ago and returned to his post on April 22. The Iraqi request included a demand for spare parts for arms delivered by Britain in the past. Britain was the chief arms supplier to Baghdad before the July, 1958, revolution.

Plan To Use Bat Bombers Against Tokyo

Buffalo, May 4. Mr Allen W. Dulles, chief of the U.S. Central Intelligence, revealed today that the United States considered attacking Tokyo by flying bats with incendiary bombs during World War II.

Mr Dulles made his revelation at a dinner of the Erie Country Bar Association and gave credit for the idea to the late General William J. Donovan, wartime Intelligence Director.

Body Found

Washington, May 4. The FBI tonight identified the body of a Negro man found in the Pearl River near Bogalusa, Louisiana, as Mack Charles Parker, who was abducted from a gas station by a mob of hooded men more than a week ago.

Churchill Met By Ike In Washington

Washington, May 4. Sir Winston Churchill arrived in Washington today and was personally greeted at the airport by President Eisenhower.

A tremendous cheer went up from a crowd of several hundred people as Britain's wartime premier, carrying a stick and his black hat in his left hand, walked slowly down the steps of the aircraft.

President Eisenhower sent his plane, Columbine III, to bring Sir Winston from New York after his trans-Atlantic journey in a Comet.

Brief Ceremony Sir Winston is here for a three-day strictly informal visit to the President and Mrs. Eisenhower at the White House. The President clapped him by the hand, then led him to a red carpeted platform.

Sir Winston, speaking before a battery of television cameras and microphones, said he brought with him Britain's assurance of lasting friendship with the United States. Speaking loudly, clearly and firmly, Sir Winston said he was most happy once again to set

MAN GAOLED FOR STONING AIR COMMODORE'S CAR

A man who threw a brick through the windscreen of Air Commodore P. D. Holder's car yesterday was today sentenced to three months' gaol. He was sentenced by Mr T. L. Yang at Central. The man was Wong Kam-wing, unemployed, of no fixed abode.

The prosecuting officer, Detective Inspector M. W. Gingles said that at 8.40 a.m. Corporal A.H. Short was driving Mr Holder to headquarters. At Stubbs Road, near Ling Nam Middle School, Wong picked up a piece of stone and threw it at the car's windscreen.

It smashed the glass and landed on the rear seat narrowly missing the Air Commodore Holder, who is at the present sitting Commander British Forces in Hongkong.

Flying Glass

The driver's hand and wrist were slightly scratched by flying glass.

After throwing the stone, Wong began to walk away. Air Commodore Holder told his driver to drive to the junction of Stubbs Road where they met a police constable on motor cycle duty. They then drove back to Stubbs Road and arrested the defendant.

Cautioned by the Police, Wong said: "I have nothing to say. I wish to die."

Wong had one previous conviction for begging.

Students Not To Boycott Margaret

Exeter, May 4. Exeter University students tonight called off their planned boycott of Princess Margaret's visit to the University on Friday.

The executive of the Guild of Students last week passed a resolution on the visit condemning what it described as "red tape" and "high-handed organisation."

The University's Vice-Chancellor, Dr J. W. Cook, saw the Guild's President and explained how arrangements for the visit had been made. One of the students said after the meeting that things had not been properly explained before.

Police Launch

NEW ZEBRA DRIVE

Because of the increasing number of zebra crossings and persistent jaywalking, the Police Traffic Branch launched a new drive yesterday instructing pedestrians in the proper use of the crossings.

The campaign will last a month and will be carried out at every crossing in Hongkong and Kowloon to guide motorists as well as pedestrians. It has been planned to assign one or two policemen to each crossing for four hours at a time at the end of which the police will move on to some other crossing by turn, thus covering all the zebra crossings in the Colony.

According to a spokesman for the Traffic Branch this morning, the first day of the campaign had been quite satisfactory.

IT ALL ENDED IN A CRASH

Jerusalem, May 4. The small Israeli air force plane circled so low over the farmyard near the Jordan valley settlement of Almut that children playing on the ground recognised the pilot.

"It's Avihu," they shouted, "bringing a love letter to Ora." The youngsters went to fetch pretty Ora but right then and there the romantic business fell apart.

The circling plane crashed in the farmyard, injuring Avihu and his passenger. Taken to a nearby hospital, the romantic Avihu produced a letter for Ora. It invited her to his wedding to another girl.

The wedding was planned for next Thursday in Tel Aviv unless Avihu is still in the hospital or detained for breaking military regulations by flying too low. — U.P.I.

Miss Britton Works 17 Hours A Day And No Overtime

By JOANNE BLAIR

".....you mean you write poetry as well?"
I asked.

"Well yes, just a little," she replied modestly.

"And anything else?"

"Oh, I suppose you could say that I play a reasonable game of chess and paint a little too, but my first love is music."

It was almost too much. In the short space of half an hour I learned that Miss Dorothy Britton, a young English woman residing in Japan, composes music, speaks four languages, gives radio and television broadcasts, sings folksongs in 17 languages and has already had one book of poems published.

MISS BRITTON

Asked how long she devotes to her work each day she replied, "From about seven in the morning until twelve at night." Then she added as if some explanation for these non-union hours were needed, "But I love it!"

Her accomplishments prove this. Already the composer of two recorded orchestral suites entitled "Yedo Fantasy" and "Tokyo Impressions" which were written for Western instruments in the Japanese idiom, Miss Britton has also translated three Japanese operas and written innumerable musical scores for films.

Somewhere along the line she manages to do some radio and television work—often singing her folksongs and accompanying herself on the Irish harp.

It is not very often that her work schedule will permit her to leave Japan, but when it does, she thinks Hongkong is just the place to visit.

We sat on the terrace at the home of Capt and Mrs. W. K. Langhorne and gazed across Deep Water Bay while the music of "Yedo Fantasy" drifted through an open window. Miss Britton, who is always either working or hobnobbing, remarked quietly, "I do wish I'd brought my paints."

HE STRAIGHTENS NAILS FOR A LIVING

By T. S. KOO

WHAT a comedown it must be for a man who once owned nine residential flats to be a street sweeper... who was once a weaving factory proprietor but is today so poor that he has to scavenge used nails from the streets to earn a few cents to buy his daily meals!

But to 63-year-old Tsang Hing, this fate is providential. He blames none, and grumbles not at all.

Tsang lives in a tiny shed about twice the size of a coffin on a landing on a flight of steps in Wyndham Street.

Before the Communists took over the mainland, he owned a weaving factory and "one lane" of residential houses in Canton. He had two wives, seven sons and two daughters.

When circumstances changed in 1949, he came to Hongkong with one of his wives and the two youngest children. His other wife stayed in his native town, Wahchow, in Kwangtung.

Sent To China

For the first two years, he stayed with old Canton friends. But realizing that it was difficult to support his family here he sent them back to China.

Finally he got a job in a paper box making firm, for $30 a month with food and lodging. Unfortunately his boss was fault-finding and Tsang was the constant target of his displeasure. Two years ago, he could not stand it any longer and left.

He came to Central to find a friend, but could not locate him. In despair, he lingered in town and chose his present site as "a home".

The "profession" of scavenging nails was suggested by a friend. He welcomed the idea. He begins at 9 o'clock every day, and works till dusk, with a day an interruption at noon to prepare his meal.

Before he starts, he hammers out the nails he collected on the previous day and sells them for 25 cents a catty.

He can pick up five to six catties on a good day, and less than a catty on a bad one.

And it takes him an hour to straighten two catties of nails.

He also collects waste papers to sell to vendors as a "side-line".

His diligence with the hammer, and the striving spirit for a poor but honest living, touches the hearts of many passers-by.

Last Christmas, a priest gave him 10 catties of rice and a blanket. Many others have given him small sums of money, old clothes and shoes.

But he rejects every offer from young and sympathetic "schoolboys." "Thank you child," he will say. "I've got your 10 cents, for you need the money too."

Last October, he could have earned a handsome sum of money if he had had a board.

One day he read in a Chinese newspaper that the Rank Organisation was looking for film extras for the film "Ferry to Hongkong."

Turned Down

He applied for the post, but was turned down because the organisation was looking for an old Chinese man with a long beard.

Tsang has a strong sense of independence. He does not want to locate his family—who are all now in China—for assistance. "I want to live on my own strength," he said.

He is also optimistic. The only thing he fears is illness. "I don't even want to think about that. The mere thought will make me worried and lower my working spirit," he said.

CURRY MEMORY

By A Staff Reporter

A BIG disappointment to the gourmets of Hongkong will be the departure this week of Dr. I. Adarkar when she leaves for Bombay with her husband, the retiring Commissioner for India.

However, for those who enjoyed her famous "curry parties," some consolation may be derived from the fact that Dr. Adarkar is just as scrupulous to be leaving.

As we sat in her spacious home on Jardine's Lookout, I asked her if she didn't find it awkward to prepare Indian food for the various nationalities she entertains.

"Not at all," she exclaimed, her bright eyes sparkling over the topic of curry. "It's exactly the same food—only a matter of leaving out the chillies."

"Apart from cooking," she continued, "there are only two other things I like better: Medicine and looking after my family."

Dr. Adarkar, who is very impressed with the amount of social work being done in the Colony, has always donated a great deal of her own time whenever she felt she was needed. Besides doing pediatrics at the Tung Wah Hospital, she has worked tirelessly with local family planning groups.

With a son in Bombay and a daughter studying at Oxford,

Dr. Adarkar is looking forward to the coming six months leave when she hopes for a family reunion.

"But I can't begin to tell you how much I've enjoyed Hongkong," she said.

"Particularly," she added, "the international favour of the place and the opportunity of meeting so many different people."

EUROPEANS ATTACK MOSLEMS AT FUNERAL

Constantine, May 4. More than a thousand young Europeans broke through police cordons here to attack Moslems at the funeral of a 10-year-old girl who was killed by insurgents while travelling by car from Constantine to Algiers.

The demonstrators broke down barricades and trampled on the bodies of Moslems who were killed by insurgents while travelling by car from Constantine to Algiers.

For some time police and soldiers were unable to prevent them molesting Moslems. Military authorities announced a curfew.

Kidnapped

The demonstrations broke out outside Constantine cemetery after the funeral of Miss Helen Serio, 10, Paul Spinnato, 23, and Antoine Pina, 23, whose bodies were found on Saturday in a ditch near their car.

French troops have since been searching for Helen Serio's sister, Marie June, 19, who is believed to have been kidnapped by insurgents.

Many right wing elements have come out against General de Gaulle's Algerian policy, particularly since the recent announcement of clemency measures for Algerian insurgents who had been condemned to death.—Reuter.

HOUSE OF LORDS DEBATE

London, May 4.

Lord Henderson, a Labour Peer, said today he regretted China could not be brought before the censure of the United Nations for her policy in Tibet. She would have come face to face with powerful criticisms, Lord Henderson said during a House of Lords foreign policy debate.

"This is another example of the folly of keeping Communist China out of the community of nations," he said.

Lord Henderson also said it was not right that India should bear the cost of maintaining relief for Tibetan refugees.

"I hope the government is already inquiring of Mr. Nehru whether he would welcome relief assistance from outside," he said.

"If such assistance would be welcome, I trust that the British Government will act speedily to make a contribution in the name of the British people."

Earl Alder, former Labour Prime Minister, said he did not think Russia was winning against the West today.

There were differences of opinion among the Communist satellites and in Russia itself, he said.

"It is likely that the time is approaching when there will be some trouble from the Communist countries themselves," he went on.

Big Trouble

Lord Alder went on to urge some initiative from countries not so deeply committed in disputes.

"It is true to say that our greatest trouble is the Russian fear of America and the American fear of Russia," he said.

"I think they are both much too strong and there is that inclination always for a Communist to see a Communist under the bed and an American to see a Communist under the bed."

He said the Russians did not want war. They were confident that in building their system they could win in the ideological field.

"I am equally sure we can win in the ideological field if we can survive," he said.

"Therefore I welcome close contact at the summit, in the foothills or even on the level."

He thought the idea of every nation having an atomic bomb just as every woman of fashion had a mink coat "deplorable."

Lord Home, Secretary for Commonwealth Relations, said there would be a ready response from the West if Russia discarded the "techniques of frustration" in the forthcoming East-West talks.

Britain did not intend to enter these talks in a negative way, he said.

He went on: "Such meetings, either at Foreign Secretary level or Prime Minister level, can only lead to frustration unless everybody views them with a genuine desire to negotiate."

"We do not delude ourselves that the aims of Communism, to probe the weak spots in Western defences, will be abandoned."

"But we believe there is a fruitful field opening up towards real co-existence," he said.

No Future

Earlier he said the Government was convinced there was no future for Berlin as a free city.

It would "simply be mopped up in the Communist empire."

It would be an threat to European security which could be fatal.

British policy in the Middle East was in exact contrast to that of the Communists, he said.

"We do not want to take sides or to meddle in Arab internal policy," he said. "All we wish to see is a growing stability and economic expansion in that area."—Reuter.

Macmillan Pledges To Work For Europe

London, May 4.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan today pledged Britain's determination to work actively for a united Europe.

He said he believed the mechanisms by which the idea was given reality would work themselves out.

He did not mention Britain's dispute with the "little six" over the Common Market, but Mr. John Edwards, President of the Consultative Assembly, said the Prime Minister's speech was a "welcome contribution to the rest of Europe was disastrous."

They were speaking at a 10th anniversary celebration of the signing of the statute of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Macmillan said: "We have seen twice in our lifetime Europe tearing itself apart in the most terrible destruction, and we have seen the results in the balance of power throughout the world by the self-destruction of the European states."—U.P.I.

STUDENT HAS 150 FOR TIBET ARMY

Berkeley, Calif., May 3.

A California philosophy graduate student said today he had more than 150 volunteers for his proposed Tibetan brigade to fight against the Chinese.

He is John Blackmore, 27, an Air Force veteran who is a graduate student in philosophy at the University of California.

He said he had written to about 30 college newspapers throughout the country asking them to publicise his scheme for raising a brigade to fight with the rebels in Tibet.

He said more than 150 people had responded by volunteering for active duty in the brigade and others had volunteered time and money for its support.

"I think we can do considerable good over there," Blackmore said.

"Our first objective is to open a supply line to the Tibetan rebels and our secondary purpose is to encourage them. The knowledge that people all over the world back them will be good for their morale."

Blackmore said the first problem the organisation faced was getting to Tibet.

Beginning

"Those who have seaman's papers can work their way over. Those who can afford it can fly. However, the majority will have to be sent by the organisation — which lacks money. Maybe we will wind up buying a surplus aeroplane and flying them over," he said.

"My letter was just the beginning of a big movement," Blackmore said.

"We have a group here, one at the University of California at Los Angeles, one at Stanford and one in Alaska. Also we have heard from volunteers in Texas and Ohio."

Blackmore said the organisation has a training programme consisting of judo, boxing, parachuting, demolition, horseback riding and rock climbing.

"About 75 per cent of the volunteers are veterans from some service," he said. "So the only special training they will need is in guerrilla warfare and in getting along in the high altitude."—U.P.I.

British, U.S. Films Vie For Honours

Cannes, May 4.

Britain's "Room at the Top," and the United States entry "Compulsion" held a strong lead in unofficial standings at the Cannes International Film Festival on the fifth day of the competition today.

But France developed a top-rank challenger tonight with "Les 400 Coups."

The 30-nation festival hit a low point during the past 24 hours with two poor full-length entries. Austria's "Eva" (the Notebook of a Young Girl) an unsuccessful satire on a teenage best selling author, and Greece's "Bloody Twilight," a modern Greek tragedy about a hot-blooded Swedish girl tourist whose love pursuit of a Greek shepherd ends in two murders. Curiously both films made a display of nudity unknown to either the Austrian or Greek cinema, but critics appeared to be in agreement that both were in bad taste.

France's "Les 400 Coups" is the first full-length effort of 27-year-old Francois Truffaut and represents a partly autobiographical view of the filmmaker's turbulent adolescence.—France-Press.

"I NOTE SIGNS OF FATIGUE"

Twenty bishops and 150 priests turned up last week for the sitting of the Convocation of Canterbury (the "Parliament" of the southern half of the Church of England) — but enthusiasm was remarkable — and lamentable — in its absence.

There were more yawns than speeches.

So much so that the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, said at one point: "I note some signs of fatigue. Some of my colleagues in the Upper House (the bishops) find it difficult to raise their hands now."

But while the bishops

dozed, some business was transacted — notably confirmation that godparents at Church of England baptisms need not themselves be Anglicans, and reaffirmation of the absolute secrecy of the confessional.

Monster Printing Press

London, May 4.

A printing press capable of producing two million copies of Pravda an hour, is being built north of Moscow, Moscow Radio reported today.

The radio, quoting a Soviet technical expert, said the first section of the new press has already reached the assembly stage.

It said the building of new presses and the rebuilding of printing works are being planned to cope with an expected 100 per cent increase in the circulation of periodicals by the end of the current seven-year plan.

The circulation of papers is expected to increase by 50 per cent and the output of books to reach 1,600 million a year, the radio reported in a home service broadcast.—Reuter.

The File on the Elusive Ballerina

by DAVID LEWIN

SUDDENLY a string of international personalities have become associated with a story of revolution and intrigue more fantastic than any fiction. It began almost like comic-opera. At the centre of the story was Dame Margot Fonteyn, whose husband was accused of trying to overthrow the Government of tiny but strategic Panama. Dame Margot was arrested, then released. She flew back to Britain.

Events suddenly looked serious. There were reports of Panama becoming a "Little Suez" with a plot to seize the canal. But it was hard to follow just where all the people who were linked with it fitted in.

This was one campaign Errol Flynn ducked out of!

New York. THE secret life of Margot Fonteyn began around a year ago when her husband ceased to be an ambassador at the Court of St James's and turned instead into a Caribbean conspirator.

The change brought the classically regal ballet dancer into a strange, new world. A world of excitement and fantasy, of Latin American politics.

At first there were the Barbados—the bearded soldiers of Castro's revolution in Cuba—then alleged gun-running in shrimp boats and a royal blue yacht off the Panama coast almost at the same time as Prince Philip was paying a state call on the ruler of Panama, whom Roberto Arias, Dame Margot's husband, is said to be plotting to overthrow.

For most of her life Margot Fonteyn has been Feggy Hookham in Reigate, has lived in the school of rigid ballet training. She had studied in Shanghai and even for a while in Louisville, in America.

Her mother was a member of the wealthy Brazilian Fontes family who made their money from coffee. From the name Fontes came later Fonteyn—and it was in the Brazilian Embassy in Panama that her husband was granted refuge.

While Margot Fonteyn supported the cause of Castro she did not play an active part. At parties in London she would tell her friends excitedly of what Castro was doing. She would use the word "we" in talking of his forces and his Government.

Enter Flynn

But it was not until she went to Panama on this fishing and holiday trip that she found out about the delights of cloak-and-dagger work.

And here enters that remarkable figure, Errol Flynn. Flynn had spent two weeks with the Castro forces in the mountains before the final coup in Havana. Then, after the revolution, he met Roberto Arias in Cuba.

Says Errol Flynn: "Tito was an old friend anyhow, because I've been around the Caribbean for years. But this time he had something special to ask. 'Can I hire your boat?' he said. Now my boat, the Zaca, is tied up in Cadiz in Spain. Just sitting around doing nothing. And it is big enough and powerful enough for ocean travel."

"I asked Tito what he wanted it for, and he finally said, 'For some work off Panama.' We didn't need to discuss the rest. I guessed what was coming. My boat stayed in Cadiz."

But Arias got his boat. From an American-born Panamanian named Jimmy Ernest he hired the 42-ft. deep-sea fishing launch Nola. It cost him 75 dollars a day.

Exit uncle

If Margot Fonteyn did not know how her husband was involved in Panama politics before she married him she must have found out quickly afterwards. For the Arias family is in up to its eyeballs. And there are many Ariases. The Panama telephone directory lists two pages of them and the country has fewer than a million people.

Petty important some of them are too. And not unversed in the art of making a revolt.

This was the family that Margot Fonteyn married into. It was more exciting than anything she had known before. When Margot first stayed with her husband at the Panama Hilton Hotel she could look down from her balcony on some of the visible signs of her husband's wealth. There, rank upon rank, were the shrimp boats, all jointly owned by Roberto Arias and film star John Wayne.

Arias also has a large share in the law firm run by his father, Harmodio. Both the father and the uncle of Dame Margot's husband had been in Panama politics—as President.

For the ballerina, meeting Uncle Arnulfo must have been quite an experience. Arnulfo had been President twice. On the first occasion in the 'forties he suddenly left the country in search of a beautiful blonde and by the time he got back he found he had lost his job and been replaced.

He had a second chance, however, when the Panama police chief, Jose Remon, who was known as Chi-Chi, put him back in power and then a little later removed him.

It was during this tricky process that a policeman was shot and Uncle Arnulfo was put on trial. Perhaps because of the legal skill of the family he was merely deprived of his political rights and still lives in Panama City today.

Between uncle and nephew Tito there grew a certain coolness. Arnulfo served his full four-year term as President (a high mark of distinction in these parts) and he still lives, aged 72, in a colonial-style house in the centre of the town.

So far in this mixed-up affair of a shrimp boat, two film stars, a fast yacht, a fashion model and a revolutionary leader in an expensive hotel, Dame Margot Fonteyn has not heard a gun fired in anger.

In time

The father of Tito Arias is a very different style of politician. Father Harmodio served his full four-year term as President (a high mark of distinction in these parts) and he still lives, aged 72, in a colonial-style house in the centre of the town.

So far in this mixed-up affair of a shrimp boat, two film stars, a fast yacht, a fashion model and a revolutionary leader in an expensive hotel, Dame Margot Fonteyn has not heard a gun fired in anger.

Some of the names in the file

But she probably left Panama just in time. For while she was still at sea Panama Government patrols were shooting at a rebel band of five in the Veraguas mountains who claimed they were part of the Arias movement.

Two of them, a newspaper columnist and an architect, escaped and were granted asylum in the Chilean Embassy in Panama. And in Cuba other armed men are waiting for the command to go—or so says Ruben Miro, cousin of Tito Arias, who adds thoughtfully that he does not wish to involve Castro personally in coming events.

In deep

Tito Arias has indulged in both with the certainty that the gains may be high and the losses low.

One of the many questions unanswered so far in all this is why Tito Arias broke with Panama President de la Guardia after serving him for a year in London.

Arias says it was because the President was interfering with Press freedom and Tito Arias is a large newspaper owner too. De la Guardia insists it is because a mining contract was given to a rival of Arias.

Whichever way it was, Dame Margot Fonteyn will be dancing again soon and the ballet will seem remote from the bullets of Panama.

But when a woman breaks loose once into a different world of adventure there can never again be a total surrender to the rigid customs of a gentler society.

Appreciating this, it is easy to understand why medical authorities can be so alarmed when they learn of unqualified or amateur hypnotists giving what they claim to be "treatment" to people who have turned to them for relief.

as an aid to childbirth is well enough known. But is it so widely known that in the United States it has been employed as an anaesthetic in operations for the removal of an appendix and a thyroid gland—or that it has been used by dentists in the extraction of teeth and in the filling of dental cavities?

One remarkable case, a classic in recent medical history, concerned a patient who was hypnotised to hold his left arm pressed against his right foot for a period of no less than twenty-eight days while a successful skin-graft was made.

It should be fully appreciated, however, that hypnosis alone cannot be considered as a cure where there is a definite physical malady. It can simply be a powerful weapon in the qualified doctor's armoury, to be used in conjunction with orthodox medical science.

In the first place, unqualified persons can sometimes be a positive menace. To induce sleep they may resort, for instance, to a technique known as vagal occlusion, which is highly dangerous.

The term vagal apparatus refers to the vagus, or pneumogastric nerve; actually a pair of cerebral nerves which, with their branches, supply the lungs and other respiratory and vocal organs as well as the stomach, spleen, liver, etcetera.

The word 'occlusion' signifies the act of stopping-up, or closing, or shutting off—in this case by pressing quickly with the hand on the vagus.

Apart from the risks a patient may run at the hands of an unqualified hypnotist who is ignorant of the harm he may do by ill-judged methods, there is also the dangerous possibility that the patient may come to imagine an improvement in his or her well-being whereas the root-cause of the trouble, if physical, is really continuing to develop—perhaps to the point of defying proper treatment.

Hence the importance of ensuring that, wherever necessary, orthodox medical science and hypno-therapy go hand-in-hand.

Hypnosis, in one or another of its stages, can be induced in a large percentage of normal people, providing they are willing to submit to the process. As one prominent authority on the subject has said, however: "People know of the power of the atom, but they don't know of the energy in people's subconscious, which we 'tap' by hypnosis. You can use hypnosis for almost anything."

WHAT HYPNOTISM CAN DO FOR YOU

By A Special Correspondent

IT would be difficult for anybody to deny now, with any degree of authority, that hypnotism has become respectable.

Hypnotism has been stripped of the air of mystery and mumbo-jumbo that used to surround it so far as most people, including many doctors, were concerned. It has become acceptable to large numbers of those whose purpose it is to heal humanity.

Which is not to say that sufferers from any ailment should hurry to the nearest hypnotist—and particularly not to the unqualified hypnotist.

The unqualified hypnotist has always been in evidence in the world, and the breed still flourishes, especially where authorised medical practitioners are not encouraged to take up the study and practice of hypnosis.

In recent years there have been impressive results over a wide field from treatment by hypnosis. People who have benefited have included sufferers from stammering, asthma, insomnia, migraine, peptic ulcers, skin ailments, and all manner of disorders having their origin in nervous conditions. In some cases, it is said, even baldness has yielded to the skill of the qualified hypnotist—when the cause of it has been emotional stress, of course.

I know of one long-standing sufferer from asthma who bleeds the day he first went to a qualified medical hypnotist. He had been a prey to bronchial asthma for many years, and had been the victim of attacks that were frequently acute.

Now, after a few months, he is a far healthier and happier man, still subject to occasional attacks, but looking forward confidently to complete cure.

For him, the magic of hypnosis is summed-up in one word—relaxation. He has been taught the art of how to relax, for as it is while his body has been relaxed and his mind has been in a receptive state, tension has been broken and wrong habits which aggravated his condition have been corrected. He has learned to dispel the dread of the next attack—that dread which sufferers from asthma know only too well. He has learned to understand the cause of those attacks, to anticipate them and often to prevent them, and, certainly to control what was formerly their paralyzing effect. Over the months the onsets have become less and less frequent, and less intense.

It's no cure-all, but, properly applied by the qualified practitioner, it can be of tremendous benefit to the victims of many ailments.

He emphasises, incidentally, that the treatment he has been receiving is medical as well as hypnotic, or hypno-therapeutic as a doctor might prefer to call it.

America is probably the country where hypno-therapy is most firmly established in the medical profession. Hypnosis is an aid to childbirth is well enough known. But is it so widely known that in the United States it has been employed as an anaesthetic in operations for the removal of an appendix and a thyroid gland—or that it has been used by dentists in the extraction of teeth and in the filling of dental cavities?

One remarkable case, a classic in recent medical history, concerned a patient who was hypnotised to hold his left arm pressed against his right foot for a period of no less than twenty-eight days while a successful skin-graft was made.

Queen Mary's Carpet Is Tucked Away Now

Ottawa. THE famous needlepoint carpet made by Queen Mary and sold to raise dollars for Britain during the 1947 crisis was not entirely the Queen's own work, says Mr Alan Jarvis, director of Canada's National Gallery where the carpet is now hidden behind a curtain.

"Nobody is criticising," he said, "but the fact is that members of the Queen's personal staff worked on the duller background. And it simply is not a work of art."

Mr Jarvis is a former private secretary to Sir Stafford Cripps. "I remember the day that the Queen offered it to Sir Stafford to be sold to raise dollars," he said. "It was in 1947 at the opening of Ham House."

"I never thought then that it would come into my keeping."

Seen 'on request'

The highly patriotic Canadian Independent Order of Daughters of the Empire bought the carpet for $105,000 (about £35,000) to keep it out of the hands of American buyers. They presented it to the National Gallery.

The Daughters were outraged recently when they heard that Mr Jarvis had ordered the carpet to be put behind a curtain where it can be seen only by visitors who request an attendant to display it.

Mr Jarvis said today: "The carpet should really be in a museum but for the present anyway it will have to remain in the gallery."

'Quite hopeless'

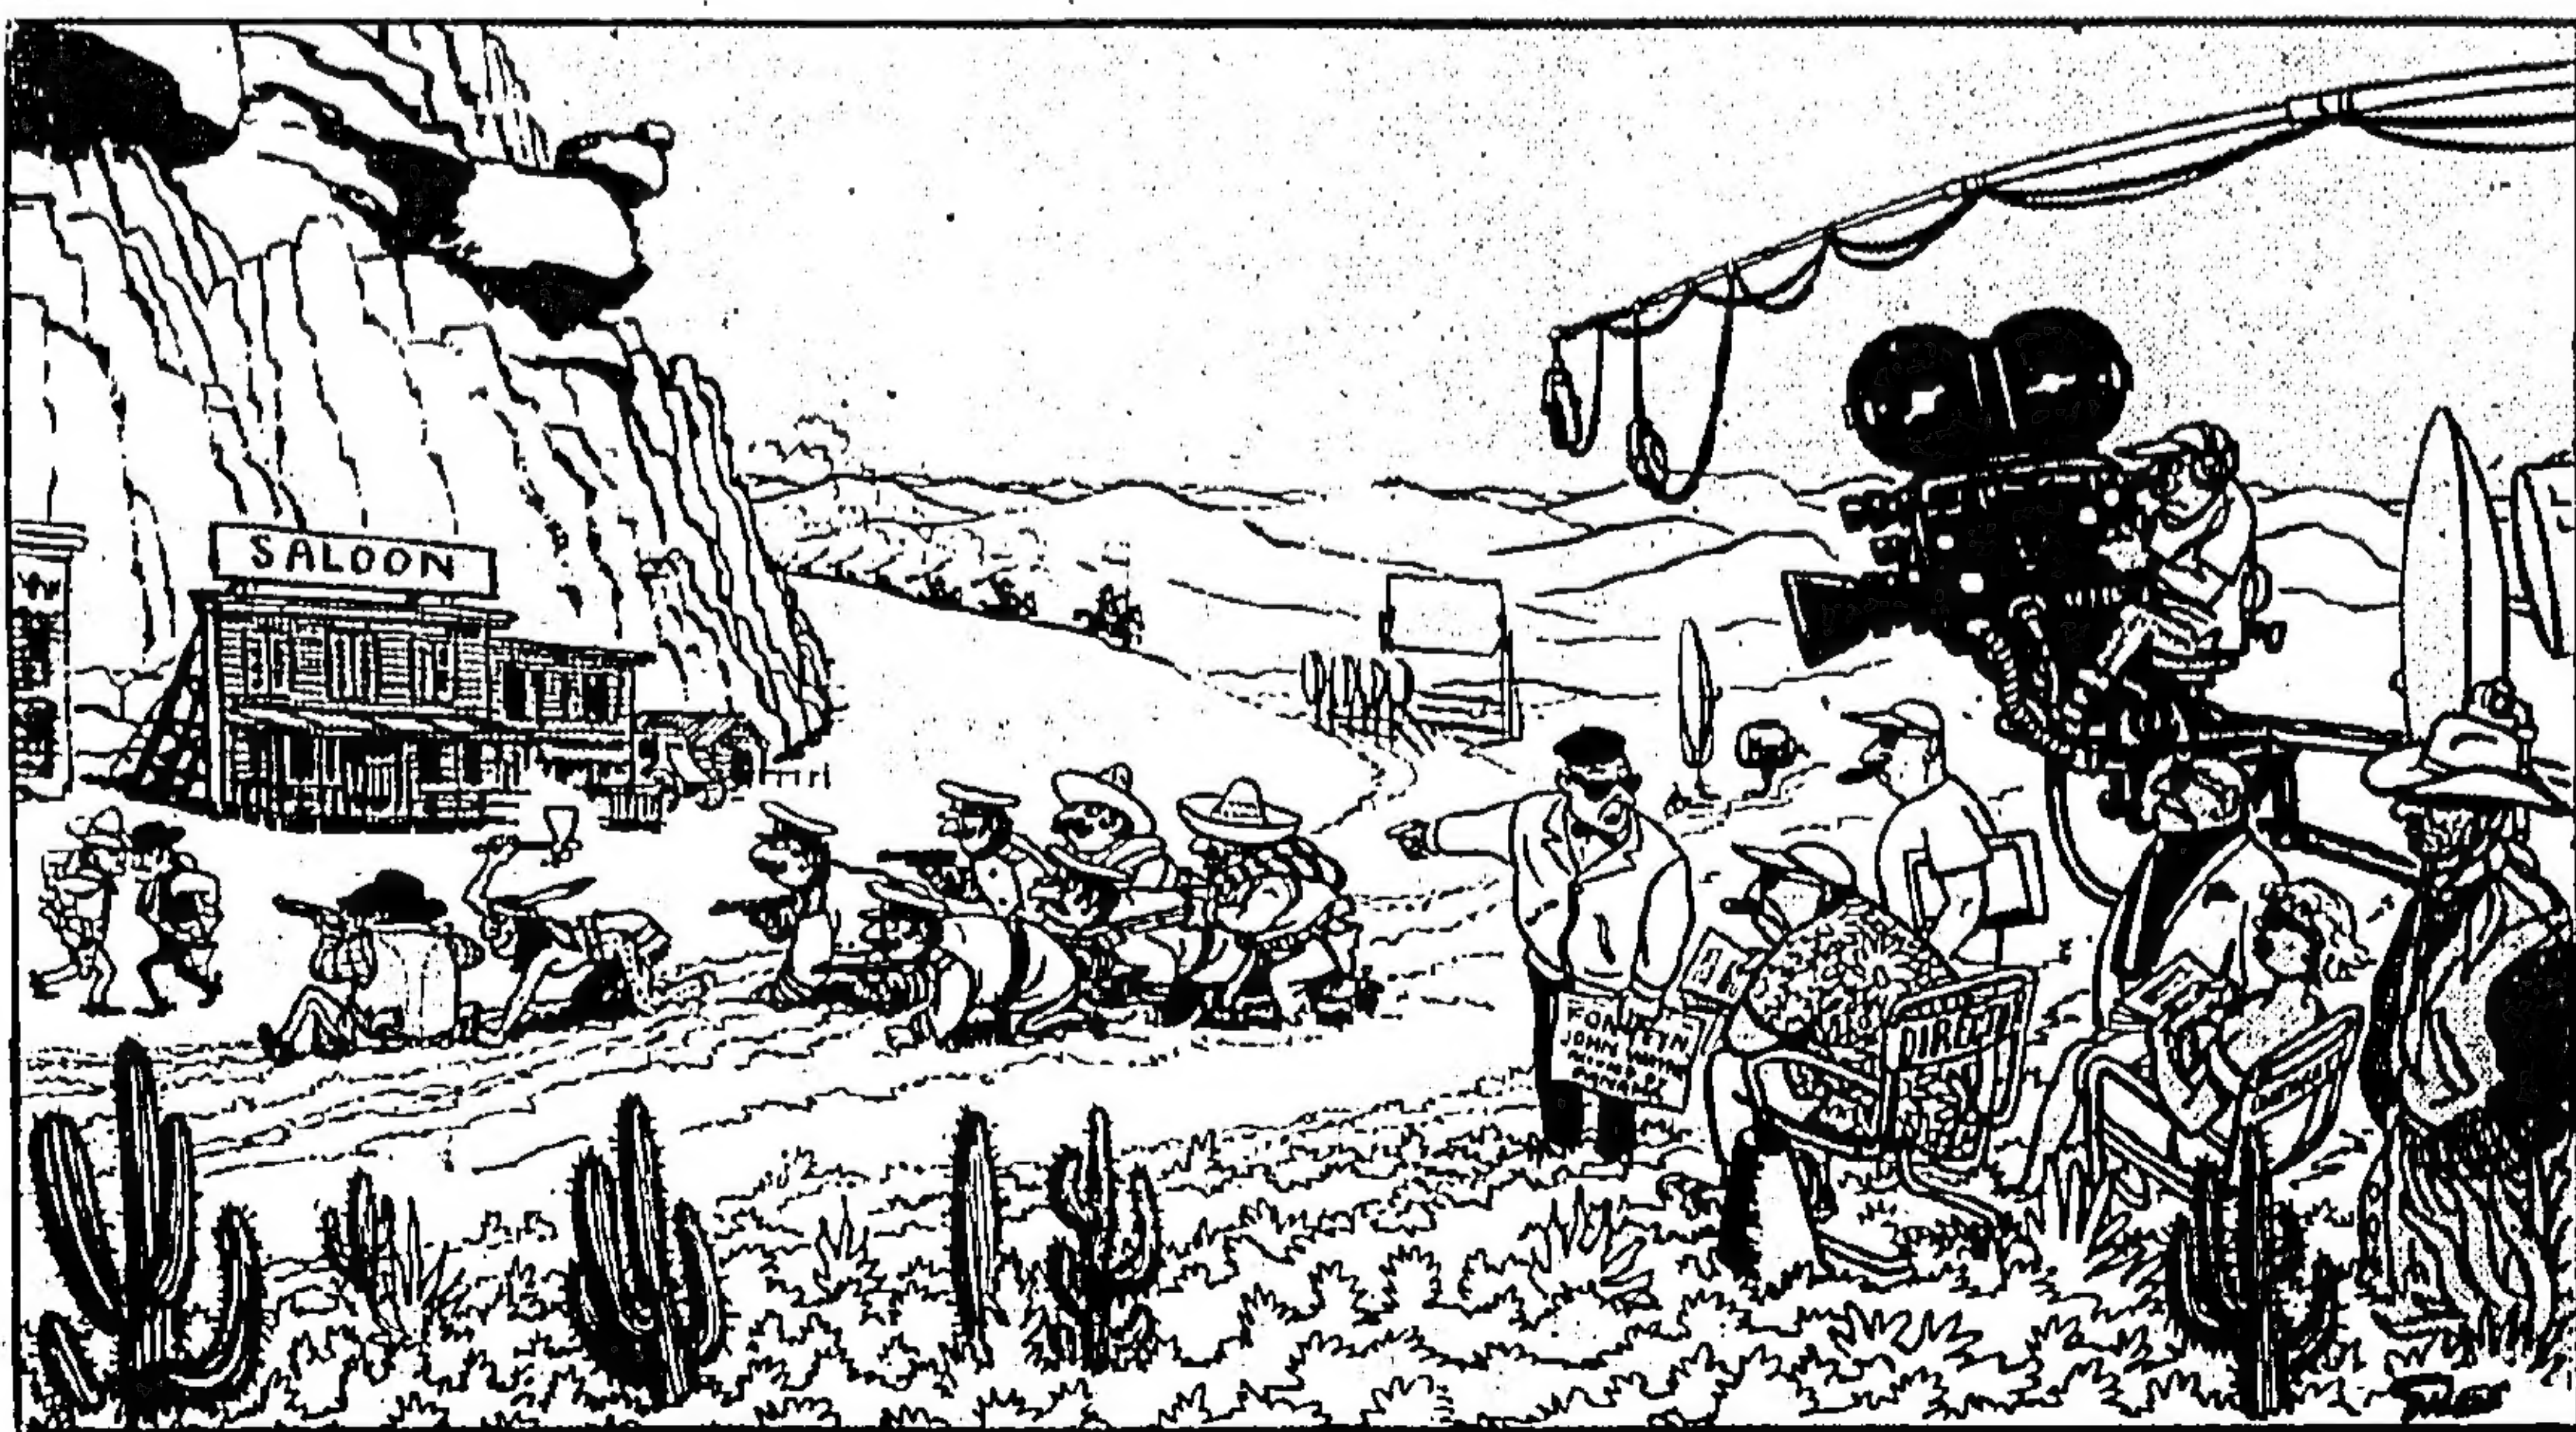

"But if it is shown permanently next to a collection of bold Canadian painting it is really quite hopeless. Any-one who wants to see it has only to ask an attendant to pull back the curtain."

The Daughters of the Empire are demanding that the carpet should be placed in an airtight glass case and be on permanent display with an explanatory note.

Although the work of the Hong Kong Anti-Tuberculosis Association is planned to meet the needs of this particular community, it is also part of the universal effort to eradicate tuberculosis. Scientists, doctors and others specialising in the treatment of tuberculosis throughout the world have made great discoveries during the last few years and the fruits of their labours are being made available to sufferers of this disease here in Hong Kong by the Hong Kong Anti-Tuberculosis Association.

The future development and extension of the work of the Association depends very largely upon the Annual Appeal for funds and it is good to remember that every donation represents an investment in health protection for our children and for ourselves.

YOUR BIRTHDAY ...By STELLA

TUESDAY, MAY 5

BORN today, you have an exceptional memory for detail as well as a talent for doing figures. You are able to speak well and are able to present your cause dramatically in public. It is possible that you would make good on the stage, in films, on radio or TV, provided you get a start with youth and concentration sufficiently on your career. You women, especially, have a gift for selecting your wardrobe and probably have definite talent for designing your own clothes.

You men have a bent for mechanics and might do well in the field of invention or in science. Actually, you are an innovator in the realm of ideas. Something you propose may be so new that it will take a considerable time to catch on. Cultivate patience, for eventually others will see your plans in the same light as you do and will want to develop them, too. You worry more than you should over things that don't really matter. When it comes to important decisions, you are able to make up your mind at once. But when it comes to minor details, you don't seem to have the temperament to cut the red tape.

Since you have a magnetic personality, you will make a host of friends wherever you go. You of the fair sex tend to be flirtatious. Guard against hurting others who take you more seriously than you take them! Don't be too much of a heartbreaker, or you might be the one to end up with your heart in tiny bits!

Among those born on this date are: Frances Henne, actress; Frederick A. P. Barnard, scientist and educator; Tyrone Power, actor; Sir Archibald Wavell, World War II field marshal; Karl Marx, reformer.

To find what the stars have in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday star and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6

TAURUS (Apr. 21-May 21)—Be alert to possible deception in the part of someone whom you would ordinarily trust.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21)—Be sure that you are thoroughly above board in everything you do today. Avoid secret dealings.

CANCER (June 22-July 21)—This could be a good day for you to entertain guests at your house. Plan a dinner party?

LEO (July 22-Aug. 21)—Don't go into anything new without first clearing the decks of some job still incomplete.

VIRGO (Aug. 22-Sept. 21)—Being completely self-reliant today will be more beneficial than trying to depend upon someone else.

LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 21)—Make sure now that income and expenses balance exactly. Not the time to risk being extravagant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 22-Nov. 21)—One of your best days this month. Achieve results in some partnership deal. Make a profit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)—Your job can bring you excellent satisfaction now if you approach it with positive action.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20)—An active, productive day. Just be alert to star and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19)—Stick to routine. Be tactful and polite when it comes to dealing with everyone.

PISCES (Feb. 20-Mar. 20)—Affairs are generally on the up-grade for you, but this evening be discreet in making a decision with everyone.

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 20)—It might be well to think twice before starting anything new just now. Be sure you have all facts.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

Baron Munch's "Rabbit"

—Knarf And Hanid Hear An Odd Tale—

By MAX TRELL

KNARF and Hanid, the Shadow Children with the Turned About Names, were telling their friend Baron Munch, that the children across the street had just been given a white rabbit as a pet.

"I wish we had a rabbit," said Knarf.

Hanid asked Baron Munch if he had ever had a rabbit for a pet.

"I Thought So"

Baron Munch, who was walking through his rose garden, looking at the buds and blossoms, nodded slowly.

"Once," he said, "I had what I thought was a rabbit. It was given to me by a very good friend of mine, Chief Dingo of Australia."

Here Knarf and Hanid both said to Baron Munch that they didn't understand what he meant by saying that he thought he had been given a rabbit by his friend Chief Dingo of Australia.

Baron Munch picked a red rose and gave it to Hanid. Then he led Knarf and Hanid to a nearby garden house. They all sat down and Baron Munch began his story.

A Curious Tail

"I said it looked like a rabbit because it really did," he said. "It was brown in color and it stood up on its hind legs just as rabbits do. But its ears were rather small for a rabbit. The most curious thing of all, though, was its tail. It wasn't short and buttony the way most rabbits' tails are. My pet rabbit had a strong thick tail."

"What did you call him?" asked Hanid.

"I called him Dingo," cried Baron Munch. "That's because he was given to me by my friend Chief Dingo."

"A few days after I received Dingo, I set sail for America, taking Dingo with me. I still thought he was a rabbit. But what a surprise I got!"

Knarf and Hanid asked Baron Munch to tell them what happened.

"I kept Dingo in a little house out in the garden," Baron Munch said. "I fed him lettuce leaves and cabbage leaves and carrots and onion tops. He started growing bigger and bigger. Soon he was twice as big as any rabbit I had ever seen before. But he still looked like a rabbit and he still acted like a rabbit, except—"

Baron Munch stopped.

"Except what?" asked Knarf.

Higher And Higher

"Except that he hopped the way no rabbit in the world hopped before. He kicked over fences and he kicked over walls. He hopped over my head as easily as a frog hops over a twig. And still he kept growing bigger and bigger. And the bigger he got, the higher he hopped."

"Then one day I took a good look at him and I said 'Dingo, you're no rabbit! You're a kangaroo!'"

"And that's what he was!"

Baron Munch stopped.

"What happened to Dingo?" Knarf asked.

"He hopped away," said Baron Munch in a sad voice. "I hope he hopped back to Australia. I think he was a bit insulted that I took him for a rabbit. Kangaroos don't ever like to be mistaken for a rabbit."

As she walked home later with Knarf, Hanid thought what a curious thing it would be if their little kitten Purr-Purr should ever grow up to become a lion.

"I wouldn't like that at all," she said.

"Dingo, you're no rabbit," said Baron Munch.

Baron Munch got up and started walking through his rose garden again.

"What happened to Dingo?" Knarf asked.

"He hopped away," said Baron Munch in a sad voice. "I hope he hopped back to Australia. I think he was a bit insulted that I took him for a rabbit. Kangaroos don't ever like to be mistaken for a rabbit."

Here Is An Easy Menu If You Entertain At Tea

"THIS week, Chef," I said, "let's give our column a hostess slant and feature several forms of entertaining. The simplest is afternoon tea."

"That, Madame, I must admit is something at which the British excel," he replied. "You might say it is their specialty."

Easy To Serve

"The service of everyday afternoon tea is easy, Chef, especially if the tea things are always kept in one place."

"First, you need a large tray. I like my new one of hammered aluminum, because it's so light."

"China, porcelain, pottery, or glass cups and saucers are all appropriate. Then a teapot for the strong-brewed tea and an extra pot for hot water for diluting the tea, if necessary, both kept hot over a two-way candle stove."

"Add a bowl of sugar tablets, a pitcher for milk, a plate and fork for sliced lemon service, teaspoons—and there you are!"

Little Cakes, Too

"Oh, you mean the little cakes! Let's have them by all means. Thin bread and butter and cream sandwiches are nice, too. And we might include low-calorie dietcake rusks for reduces."

"When afternoon tea turns into a party, refreshments are usually more elaborate."

He Can't Win All The Time

By G. C. MYERS, Ph.D.

YOU know the adult who, at a game of cards, can't bear to lose several times in succession. He may complain that he never gets good cards or he may say nasty things about others in the game.

I once knew a woman who, after losing several bids or being unable to bid for a long while, insisted on changing her seat with her partner. Such persons were probably like that in childhood.

HE USUALLY WON

When our eldest son was around 8 or 9, he and his younger sister used to play card games for hours. More often than not he won, but she would cheerfully keep on playing.

After a year or so, they began to play a foursome game with us and she caught on pretty well. After he and his partner lost a few times, he began to complain and weep and even run away from the group. It was only with considerable persuasion that we were able to keep him playing. But he gradually gained in skill and by and by became a very good sport at games.

EARLY PROBLEM

This problem may arise early with some children. Unless they have long and skilful guidance, they may not soon recover, if ever. And we need to remember that it may take a long, long time and a lot of practice in many situations to transform a child who is a poor sport into a good one.

The Pennsylvania mother who wrote the following about her son hardly realized this fact:

"My husband and I have just given our boy his seventh birthday party. What a time we had! We first let the ten children play 'Musical Chairs.' When our son was left without a chair, he raised a great fuss. We tried to explain the game, but he cried and wouldn't listen."

HAD A GOOD CRY

"Another game was played and the same thing happened. He said the other children weren't playing properly. He even went to the bedroom and had a good cry."

"After the party, my husband talked very kindly to the boy and explained that he should not always expect to win, but must try to be a good sport. However, he insisted it was his party and he should win. We told him we were not going to give him any more parties if he continued to act in that way."

WORK ON THE PROBLEM

Instead of threatening him with no more parties, work on this problem over weeks and months in the family. Aim to give him practice in contests in which he is watched, so that he will learn from experience not to expect to win more often than he loses.

FASHIONETTES

Summer necklaces take on the outdoor look. They are made of mother of pearl, shells, glass, wood, coral, and precious woods. Paris jewellers show sea shells in all-white or combinations of white, black and coral; red seeds mixed with brown, beige, and heavier wood beads; and horn in different tones of beige.

The old-fashioned shoe is making a come-back—in a modern form. The National Shoe Fabric Association reports that new shoes will come in cool mesh, miniature porthole designs and dress-up ties in striped patterns, resembling old-time stockings.

Fashion-minded men will take the Continental step this summer. Shoes, inspired by Italian designs, will have square toes, ornamental tassels, laces, straps or buckles. The strap with a Velcro fastener will be used widely. Ventilated uppers will be important, such as Spanish hand-woven tops and perforated leathers. The shoes will be lighter and trimmer, keyed to light-weight wash-and-wear suit fabrics, says the National Shoe Institute.

New idea in coats—a white satin coat with wide sleeves plucked by a white satin rose on each arm, just below the shoulder. The designer behind the idea—Pierre Cardin of Paris.

By ERIC BROWN
(Scotland and Buchanan Castle)

THE drive into a strong head wind has always been a favourite golf shot of mine—not because I have always been good at it, but because I never fail to thrill at the challenge it presents. To play the shot I take up my usual slightly open stance. The position of the ball in relation to the feet, however, is different than for the normal drive.

Instead of being at a point opposite the left heel, I have it slightly ahead of a point midway between the heels. Contrary to what you might expect, I tee the ball about half an inch higher than I usually do.

THE SECRET

My swing stays virtually the same as for a normal drive. The one important difference is the position of the hands at impact. A conscious effort has to be made to get the hands ahead of the club head when striking. The secret of getting the hands ahead of impact is to cut down on the uncoiling of the wrists.

This may cost club-head speed, but the low flying shot will more than make up for that in the end. It is the action of getting the hands in front that sends the ball off the tee in that pleasing, low, wind-cheating trajectory. What has happened is that the face of the club has been brought into a slightly shut position as it meets the ball.

Final points to follow in mastering this shot are:—
(1) There must be no tension, be perfectly relaxed.
(2) Do not try to force the shot, in fact make it that little bit easier.
(3) Keep the head as still as possible.

AMERICAN BASEBALL REVIEW

Champion Yankees Having Their Worst Slump In The Last Twenty Years

New York, May 4.

The once-proud Yankees—champions of the baseball world—were eating humble pie today as they languished in seventh place in the American League and began to bicker among themselves in the clubhouse, on the field and in the dugout.

Having lost nine of their last ten games they are six and a half games from first place, held by the surprising Cleveland Indians. Casey Stengel, the usually voluble manager of the Yankees was at a loss for words to supply the answer. He wouldn't speak English, much less "stengelish" after his team had been vanquished in both ends of a Sunday double-header by the last-place Detroit Tigers.

Obvious Reason

The obvious reason for the early slump of the champions can be seen in the batting averages, the home run totals and the RBI columns. They simply aren't hitting.

They are not producing runs, having scored an average of only two runs per game to date. In the last ten games they have hit only three homers. That is a far cry from the fence-busting Yankees, proud ruler of the kingdom of swing, once the scourge of American League pitchers. Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig must be turning over in their graves.

But in spite of the terrible slump, one cannot write the Yankees off—they cannot be told short because they are too good a team and are a cinch to hit their way out of the slump before the season is much older. It is the worst slump they have had in the last twenty years.

Setting Fast Pace

Meanwhile the Cleveland Indians, getting good pitching and timely hitting are setting a fast pace even though some of their slugging stalwarts such as Minnie Minoso, Rocky Colavito and Vic Power are well below the 300 mark. When that team gets up to its batting potential, the high-flying Indians are bound to get stronger and might go all the way. They were picked for second place in this corner.—France-Press.

American League Win For Boston

New York, May 4. Jackie Jensen smashed his fifth home run of the year for two runs today and Dick Gernert brought across three more with long doubles as Boston clubbed Kansas City's relief pitching for an 8-4 victory. It was the only American League game of the day or night. Don Montbouquette, 24-year-old Boston native who was released from the Army on March 25 and has yet to put in a full season in the majors, fanned the A's at the plate and got credit for his first win against no losses.—U.P.I.

Special Film Made In Honour Of Fangio

London, May 4. A 20-minute film "Homage to Fangio", showing some of the great victories of Juan Manuel Fangio, five times world champion racing driver, had its premiere here this evening at the Savoy Hotel.

The Argentine ace, now a successful businessman was among the specially invited audience who saw the film. Highlight of the film is the scene showing Fangio driving a Maserati around the Monza track in Italy. A camera was installed in the car to record the drive and the audience rose to cheer when the scene, showing the ex-champion at his greatest, was over.

After the film, made by a British petrol company, Fangio was presented with a copy of it and a painting showing him driving a Maserati.—France-Press.

Tremendous Home Welcome For Forest

Nottingham, May 4. Nearly 100,000 people lined the streets here tonight to cheer the Nottingham Forest football team, winners of this year's Football Association Cup final.

The team, which beat Luton Town by two goals to one at Wembley Stadium on Saturday, travelled through the streets on the top of a coach.

Scores of women and children fainted in the 30,000 crowd packing the city's old market square, where the team were given a civic welcome.—China Mail Special.

Henry Longhurst On Golf LEGAL LUNACY

I wonder how many golfers, other than those who have served on the Rules of Golf Committee, have read the rules of golf?

I dare say the total throughout the whole world could easily be numbered.

Nor do I blame them. Last week I had a try myself. There are 41 rules, some with anything up to half a dozen sub-sections. I got bogged down after 24 but even this, I can assure you, was quite a meritorious effort.

The question arose through the legalising of the professional tournament at Moor Park, of illegal practices in which 99 per cent. of club golfers cheerfully indulge throughout the year. Namely, picking out "suckers" and smoothing out pitch marks on the green when they interfere with the putt.

Desirable

Research now convinces me that this is not only practicable but desirable.

The present complex unworkable rules endeavour, after the wildest of efforts by our legislators, to cater for almost every contingency, and an ever-increasing volume of Decisions explains their application.

If we started again with fresh minds and a blank sheet of paper to produce a short set of rules for day to day golfers, three-quarters of the present code would never be seen again. I should start on the principle that, having been at it for a few hundred years, we know the game of golf is. On this basis all the 34 Definitions (e.g., "Committee," "the committee" is the committee in charge of the competition) could go together with specifications of balls and clubs, which would remain available for manufacturers.

Two Principles

I should rely largely on two principles, one written, the other not. The written one, which I should advance to Rule 2, is the present Rule 11 (4): "If any point in dispute be not covered by the rules or local rules, the decision shall be made in accordance with equity." The unwritten one might be worded "If a player play not in accordance with the accepted spirit of the game, the penalties shall be (a) in match play; don't play with him again and (b) in medal play; don't accept his entry next time." You would be surprised what a multitude of golfing sins this would cover.

Let us look at some of the rules which under these simple principles could go. All the business about 14 clubs, for instance. All that this rule did was to stop a few idiots carrying 20 and caused thousands more idiots (if they will pardon my saying so) who would have carried seven or eight to carry 14 and then have to buy little prisms to push them round in. For carrying a 15th club by mistake a woman in America was correctly penalised 36 shots, i.e., two strokes a hole. Judged by any standard this is lunacy. Here are some more that could go. (1) You must not play a ball when it is moving. Well, who the devil wants to?

Good Heavens!

If a man guides his ball into the hole while it is moving you disqualify him under Rule 1 (see later). (2) You must not accept advice. What does it really matter? You have still got to play the shot. (3) You must not play a ball when it is moving. Well, who the devil wants to?

Good Heavens! We don't need a rule for that! If he won't tell you, don't play with him again. (4) You must not tee up in front of the tee box. Of course not. No one on purpose risks his reputation to turn a 450-yd. hole into 449 yd. 2 ft. (5) You must not "test the surface of the green by roughening or scraping."

This has always defied my comprehension. The penalty, believe it or not, is two strokes or loss of hole.

It occurs to me that all the rigmarole about the flag stick could go. In other words you can have it attended, take it out, leave it in—whatever you like. If you hit it, the best of luck; and if the ball rests against it, it counts as "in". Thus saying the "audacious wagging" at present required to make it drop to the bottom.

Could Easily Go

All the stuff about accidental hitting, your partner or opponent or their clubs, with savage penalties against one side or the other, could surely go. No one does it on purpose. If they do, see penalties aforementioned.

Innumerable other sections—including five on how to drop or place the ball—could easily go, but some, of course, must remain. I should certainly keep the present penalty, Rule 1, defining in two lines the game of golf, under which you catch deliberate offenders on the ground that they are "not playing golf."

Also, the rule about immovable objects and movable impediments, though I fancy that nearly every golfer would welcome an extra rule that, if you really get stuck, you can at any time count two strokes and drop your ball on the nearest edge of the fairway.

I should permit "suckers" to be lifted and dropped anywhere, except in a hazard, and pitch marks to be smoothed out on the green and the ball cleaned.

In the old days the greens were comparatively rough. It seems ridiculous nowadays to spend thousands of pounds on billiard table surfaces, only to have everything nullified by a whacking great lump of mud on the ball.

At the moment only a few links lawyers know the rules of golf. My tedious and self-sacrificing labour in ploughing through the first 34 has convinced me absolutely that all that most of us need could be condensed into the equivalent of a score card and carried in the pocket of the bag.

I do hope that our British and American legislators when they meet next month will give this elementary proposition a thought.

THE GAMBOLS

THIS HAS BEEN A SEASON I WANT TO FORGET

Groin Injury Shattered All My Hopes

By TOM FINNEY

(Of Preston North End and England)

THIS IS THE LAST ARTICLE IN THE TOM FINNEY FOOTBALL SERIES FOR THIS SEASON. WE HOPE TO SIGN HIM UP TO WRITE FOR US AGAIN NEXT SEASON, FOR WE FEEL THAT HE HAS AN ALMOST UNRIVALLED KNOWLEDGE OF THE GAME AND PERSONALITIES.

The curtain falls on another season and I look back over the triumphs, the tragedies, the thrills, the disappointments, the new names and the old that go to make up the history of the 1958-9 campaign.

At first glance, there seems little to remember. There have been few big-match dramas and both the Cup and the international fronts have been strangely quiet.

But to many men nevertheless this has been a season which will stand out when all the others have faded. It has been lived with personal success.

Wright's Triumph

High on the list comes BILLY WRIGHT, who led Wolves to their second successive championship and also won his 100th international cap. I am sure Billy will never forget how this cup was celebrated throughout the footballing world. There is still no serious challenger for his England berth and who knows how much further his international career may run?

Wolves manager STAN CULLIS has turned impending failure into triumph. After the club was eliminated from the European Cup, it seemed as though their long run was ending.

The critics talked about the years catching up with a veteran team. But once they sighted the home straight, Wolves moved like champions again.

Not Enough Credit

Only Manchester United, piloted by MATT BUSBY, stayed with them. I still don't think that the United and their Scottish manager have received the credit they deserve for finishing runners-up.

Remember that the Munich disaster was only just over a year ago and that Matt Busby has had completely to rebuild his side.

Already, Manchester United are reviving memories of the original Busby Babes and we have not seen their peak performances yet.

Matt, the great disciple of home-grown talent, proved too that he was prepared to spend when he bought Sheffield Wednesday's ALBERT QUIXALL for a new British record fee of £45,000.

Courageous Buy

It was a courageous buy, because the bright promise of the former Golden Boy seemed to be fading. His first appearances in United's colours were uneventful and even the Old Trafford fans began to wonder whether Matt Busby had miscalculated.

Quixall soon answered that question by linking up brilliantly with DENIS VIOLET and BOBBY CHARLTON to form possibly the most powerful inside-forward trio in Britain. Free were climbing and Arsenal set new records when they signed big MEL CHARLES from Swansea for the equivalent of £47,000. It was the end of a long, slightly unhappy transfer story, but it could be the beginning of a new era at High-bury.

The teams of Arsenal's hey-days were built around big, talented centre-halfs like Noel and, although he has barely had time to settle down, the club have every reason for high hopes next season.

Transformed Arsenal

Manager GEORGE SWINDIN has already transformed Arsenal and the signing of my Preston team-mate TOMMY DOHERTY has proved a very shrewd buy indeed.

Another manager with good reason to remember the 58-9 season is Norwich's ARCHIE MACAULAY who so nearly piloted his Third Division men through to the Cup Final. There was almost a touch of genius in the way Archie moulded this team into a smooth, ball-playing combination and, until they met Luton in the semi-final replay, anything seemed possible.

But if Luton skipper SYD OWEN failed to end one storybook adventure, he nevertheless started in another... his own. To steer your club through to Wembley in your final season must be a wonderful sensation, but to be crowned "Footballer of the Year" as well... that's almost too good to be true.

Other players with reason to remember are:

JOHNNY HAYNES who played such a big part in leading Fulham back to the First Division.

JIMMY GREAVES, breaker of records at Chelsea.

Newcomers to Watch

PETER BROADBENT, Wolves' talented inside-forward, who has made a strong bid for a permanent berth in the England side.

And a host of newcomers who are challenging for a place in the line-up... men such as Manchester United's left-back CARALON... Bolton's inside-forward HILL... Blackburn's DOBING... Newcastle's EASTHAM and Fulham's MUL-LERY.

How about TOM FINNEY? This, frankly, is a season I want to forget. I have only 15 appearances for Preston out of a possible 42 and all my hopes seem to have tumbled by the wayside.

But at least my groin injury seems to have been cured. And so I have another set of ambitions all forged and ready for the autumn.

Who knows what lies ahead? Will the Arsenal rise again? Will Matt Busby break the power of Wolves? And will the Cup come home to Deepdale where it belongs?

We will have to wait until next season to find the answers. (All Rights Reserved)

MCC Asking Too Much For Television Rights Says BBC

Negotiations are still going on between the BBC and the MCC about televising the Test matches for this and the next two seasons, a BBC spokesman said tonight.

"No contract has yet been signed, but the BBC is negotiating on the basis of a three-year, inclusive contract."

During the past three seasons the BBC has paid the MCC £30,000 a year for limited facilities. The agreement ended last season.

India are the tourists this season, South Africa next year, and Australia in 1961.

The MCC, worried by falling gates, has been asking what the BBC considers an exorbitant fee for televising this year's England-India Test matches.—France-Press.

Indians Start Well Against Club Cricket Conference

London, May 4. Excellent off-break bowling by Muddiah and a hard hitting opening partnership of 128 between Roy and Apte put the Indians in a strong position against the Club Cricket Conference on the first day of their two-day match at the Oval.

Sweden, Brazil Complete Davis Cup Wins

Stockholm, May 4. Sweden completed a 5-0 win over Hungary in the Davis Cup European zone first round tie here today.

In the remaining two singles Ulf Schmidt beat Andras Adam 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, 7-5 and Jan Erik Lundqvist beat Istvan Gulyas 6-3, 7-5, 6-1.

Sweden will next play Chile and the winners of that tie will play Britain in the third round. At Berlin, Brazil, who gained a winning 3-0 lead yesterday, completed a 4-0 victory over West Germany.

Rain started to fall during the fifth match of the tie, when Ronald Barnes, of Brazil, led Wilhelm Bungert 10-8, 3-4 and the team captains agreed there was no need to complete the match.

In the other match played today Brazil's Carlos Ferrandez beat Dieter Eickelbe 6-1, 6-6, 6-3. Brazil's opponents in the second round are Poland, who had a first round bye.—Reuter.

The touring team lead by 31 runs with eight first innings wickets standing. Dowton, the Conference captain, must have regretted his decision to bat first on the drying pitch for, apart from Willis and the left-handed Swann, the CCC batsmen found extreme difficulty in playing the accurate Indian spin bowling.

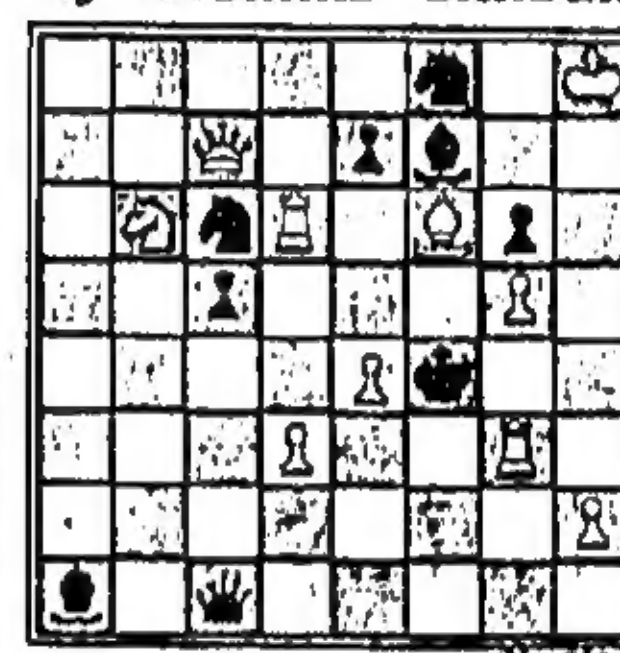

Muddiah, bowling off-breaks at near medium pace, was especially dangerous. He turned the ball sharply and gave the batsmen little chance to relax, conceding only 40 runs in taking six of the last eight Conference wickets.

Roy and Apte pulled and cover-drove powerfully and only Hall, a steady fast bowler, troubled them. Roy hit 70, including 11 fours, before being caught behind the wicket.

Today's close of play scores were: Club Cricket Conference—68. Indian Tourists—128 for two wickets.—France-Press.

New Road Will Ease Congestion

Engineers Report On Taipo Rd Link With Kai Tak

By A CHINA MAIL REPORTER

The two-mile-long $3 million highway which will link Kai Tak with Taipo Road will greatly relieve the congestion in the Shek Kip Mei district when it is finished in 1960.

Not only will this 24-foot-wide highway be an up-to-date trunkway, it will remain modern for many years to come for the survey and planning is based on expansion.

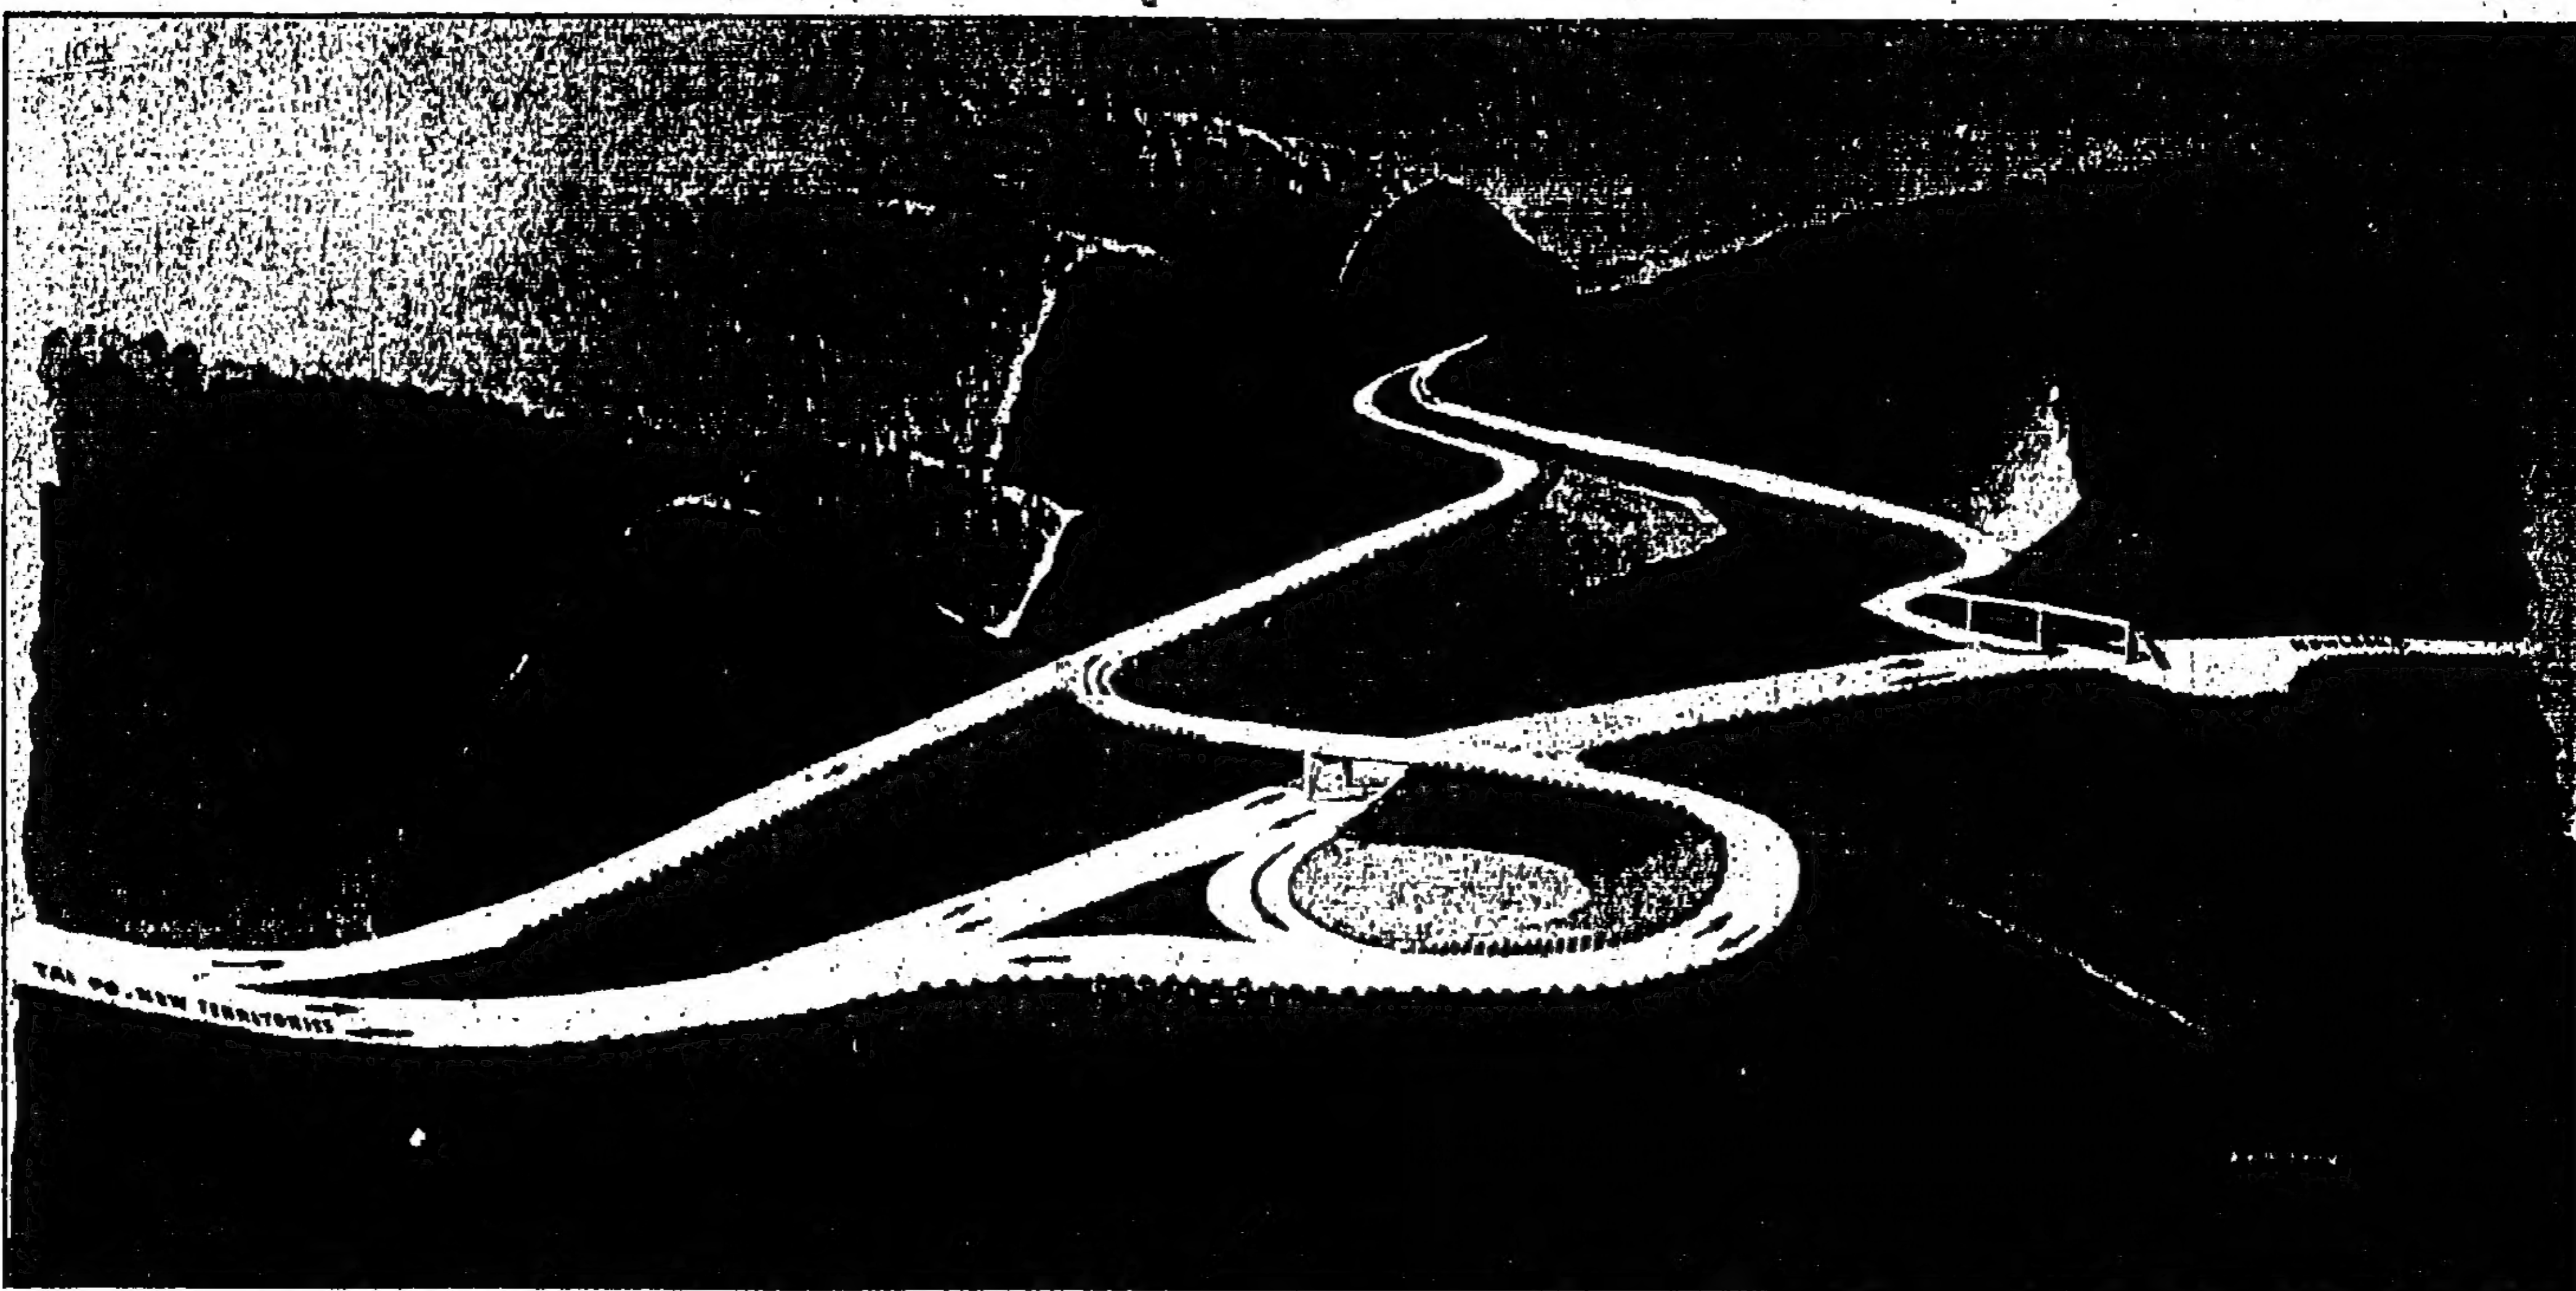

When occasion arises, an added width can be built, making the highway a dual carriage highway, capable of carrying two lanes of up traffic and two down.

30mph Standard

An engineer of Scott and Wilson, Kirkpatrick and Partners, consulting engineers to the Hongkong Government, told me that this highway is planned on a 30 mph standard. In other words, at all times a vehicle will be able to maintain a speed of 30 miles per hour on this two-mile stretch. Another commendable feature of this road is that good opportunities are provided for a motorist to overtake a slow travelling and heavily laden lorry. The engineer says that at least 50 per cent of this whole length of road is suitable for overtaking; and that means overtaking with safety.

During the survey and planning, greatest care was shown on the gradient of the road so as to minimise gear changing. The gradient is constant throughout the road's entire length. The importance of drainage has engaged the full attention of the surveyors. The new road is planned with particular emphasis on this point to cope not only with existing drainage but with a view to future development of the whole area. The problem of getting on to Taipo Road is another important factor. In order to avoid the bottleneck at the junction of Taipo Road and the new road a fly-over will be built. (see drawing)

The new road will be 24 feet wide and is "super elevated" at the bends.

This artist's impression shows the section of the fly-over along the 2-mile long new road. The construction of this new highway will begin in two months' time and will take about a year to complete. The bridge on the right of the picture is a foot bridge to enable pedestrians to cross from the Taipo Road to the new Kowloon Hills Road.

Italian Car Designer Leaves

Mr Battista Farina, world famous Italian car designer and President of Pinin Farina Company, left by P&O for Tokyo this morning after a four-day visit.

Mr Farina, who is on a three-month pleasure trip around the world, was accompanied by Mr G. Canezzini, technical consultant.

Mr Farina will visit South Central and North America and Moscow before returning to Rome.

Encouragement For Amateur Musicians

It is generally agreed that with the advent of radio and the highly perfected gramophone, music appreciation has become much wider. On the other hand, less people tend to make music themselves. This is deplorable, for real appreciation of music can only be attained by those who play an instrument. Therefore every enterprise which gives amateurs an opportunity to exercise their faculties should be encouraged.

Such enterprise is The South China Philharmonic Orchestra, most of its members being amateurs who are mixed with a few professionals and semi-professionals. Last night at the spacious hall of the Pui Ching Middle School, Kowloon, it gave a concert, which was attended by a large and friendly audience, consisting mostly of young people who obviously enjoyed the music as much as the orchestra enjoyed playing it.

IMPROVED

I am happy to state that the orchestra, since I heard it last, has improved considerably. It became evident that its gifted conductor, Professor Lin Sheng-shi, had rehearsed it carefully, that the strings were more able to follow their talented leader, Mr. Chung Chik-choi, and that a much better co-ordination between the various groups of instruments was achieved. The woodwind and brass are still the weak spot of the orchestra, but they too had instances where they played well and with a fairly secure intonation. Prof. Lin had selected a programme more suitable for an orchestra of this character and facilities. Therefore the overture to "La Dame Blanche" by Boieldieu came off quite well and so did the "Intermezzo" by Mascagni as well as most of the other items on the programme.

SOPRANO

Beautiful soprano Lola Young, one of the soloists of the evening, sang with her pleasant voice and clean technique to Chinese songs by Prof. Li, which deserved greater appreciation from the audience. Violinist Wan Jim-ze was the other soloist of the evening. He deemed it necessary to play with the help of a microphone which makes it rather difficult to assess the real qualities of his playing. In fact, the loudspeakers did not only magnify his tone volume out of proportion and gave his violin a "cello-like" sound, but it exaggerated his weaknesses, of which his often faulty intonation is the most outstanding. He has apparently not a great sense of rhythm and therefore gave a rather leaden-footed performance of Saint-Saens' technical difficulty "Rondo Capriccioso" while the Slavonic sentimentality of a "Ballade" by Paganini suited his temperament better.

MURDER TRIAL DRAMA

MAN ON MURDER CHARGE FOUND BOY ON GROUND

Chung Kwong, a 33-year-old farmer and landowner on trial at the Criminal Sessions this morning, said that the small boy whom he was alleged to have murdered was on very friendly terms with him.

He said on the day of the incident, he had gone to the fields in the New Territories looking for the boy's mother. When he recovered his reasoning after attacking the woman with a chopper he found the boy on the ground.

"I found I had chopped the wrong person," he held no grudge against the boy and I felt remorseful, which prompted me to give myself up to the Police," he said.

Died Later

Chung was alleged to have murdered the boy, Yuen Cheung-ming, aged 10, in Ngau Tam Mei village, near Lok Ma Chau, in January. The boy died three days after the attack on January 8. The Prosecution alleged that Chung had also seriously wounded the boy's mother, Yau Wan-tai, while she was working in the field.

Testifying on his own behalf, Chung said he sold a piece of land to Yau Wan-tai in 1957 and helped her to build a hut in the village. He had also lent her money on three occasions. Relations between them were so good that at one time the woman was contemplating adopting him, he said.

However, this friendly relationship ended in 1958 when the woman began spreading rumours about him and his sister-in-law, the accused said. These rumours were all fabricated he added. On January 7, this year, the accused said, his mother was ill and he took her to his sister in Hongkong. Returning to the village the following morning, he heard more rumours.

Recovered

"I felt indignant, so I took a knife and looked for Yau Wan-tai. It was after a midday. I was so inflamed with anger that my sight was obscured. Then I chopped. "My reasoning was not functioning at the time and the anger inside me had confused my mind," he said. He said when he recovered his senses, he found the boy

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Flashing Headlines

Sir—I was surprised to see a news report from U.P.I. with the caption "BID TO CAPTURE HONGKONG TRADE" appearing in your issue of 1st May, 1959. In Indonesia, Hongkong is being able to sell relatively smaller quantities of yarn now, than in higher counts. Reports are received to the effect that yarn from Mainland China have largely taken the bulk of the Indonesian yarn market. Pakistan's effort to sell yarn in Indonesia, therefore, can never amount to displacing Hongkong yarn because, for one thing, the quality of yarn is different and, secondly, the count is higher in the case of Hongkong yarn. There is, therefore, no basic competition between yarn exports of Hongkong and those of Pakistan.

Throughout the Commonwealth we are having difficult times. Commodity prices have dropped. Since the Commonwealth constitutes the biggest trading area so far as commodity trade is concerned, we are having a bad time because of low Foreign Exchange earnings. Tendencies are visible in the horizon whereby certain trading countries are grouping into protectionist areas. I am here referring to the European common market. Developments like these introduce further restriction in the markets even within the free world. You will appreciate, in a world situation like that, the Commonwealth partners cannot afford to quarrel with each other, at least not in commercial matters. Pakistan has the best of feelings towards continued economic prosperity of Hongkong; its Government and people share that sentiment effectively. I have no doubt, by and large, it is true for Hongkong also. In view of this I would appeal to you to avoid flashing headlines of the type I am referring to in this letter, namely, "BID TO CAPTURE HONGKONG TRADE". Such captions may only be used with reference to trade activities of nations inimical to the free world and should never have been used in relation to trade activities of partners in the Commonwealth. I would request you to examine this aspect of the matter and advise your collaborators to use more circumspection in the manner of news service to a sensitive population.

A. RAB.
Pakistan Trade Commissioner.

Accused Breaks Down Under Cross-Examination

A 19-year-old accused giving evidence in the Cape Collinson murder trial today dramatically broke down when he was shown a brick with which he allegedly struck a man.

Choi To, who previously in his evidence had said that his brain was "getting confused" and that he did not know what he was talking about, suddenly began to cry and said:

"I must respect the Court, because I believe in God. I am a Catholic. I feel very painful in the head now. Mr So Shul-bor never scolded us. My behaviour has been bad."

Senior Crown Counsel Mr Desmond Mayne prosecuting: "Do you feel painful because of what you did to Mr So?" Yes.

Giggling

Did you hit him on the head with bricks?—I intended to knock him unconscious. Did you or did you not hit him on the head with bricks?—At the time I struck him, he did not turn out to be unconscious and kept on giggling. This happened in hut number 17. I wanted to knock him unconscious. I am dealing with everything, it has nothing to do with them (pointing out the other three accused).

Didn't you and the three other accused plan to escape that night?—I don't know. Mr Mayne repeated the question. Choi To: There was a plan to escape.

Confused

Mr Mayne: Between you and the three other accused—I don't know. My brain is confused. I am afraid to say something which is not right. I don't remember what I have said before. If I say something which is not right what are you going to do about it?

Mr Mayne: Same question. Choi To: I was standing there for the purpose of escaping. I am not used to this society. If I am required to die, I am prepared to die.

Mr Mayne: Same question. Choi To: I don't remember what I have said before. My brain is confused.

Mr Mayne: I am putting it to you that you are only a murderer and a fraud.

Upon application made by Counsel Benjamin Liu, appearing for Choi To, Mr Justice A. D. Scholes adjourned the hearing until Monday to enable Choi to be mentally examined.

Other persons in the case are Yau Kien-wah, 20, Ng Tak-wai, 21 and Chin Shu-kei, 20. They are all charged with having on the night of November 18 and 17 last year, murdered So Shul-bor at the Cape Collinson Training Centre.
